Message : When communities voice concerns about the RENA numbers we are told "It is what it is". Developers are purchasing up multiple single family homes, that young families could potentially afford to buy and renovate. These are being replaced with multi unit dwellings at 1 million plus each. These large development projects being shoved down our throats, are ruining our quality of life. California does NOT have unlimited resources, and needs THOUGHTFUL development. The approach the leaders are taking is ruining this state for everyone. I see multiple large, bad projects being built all over. Very few of these units are actually affordable, and many units sit empty. We need to look at empty buildings in Los Angeles that could be used with some creative thinking. You need to do better at working with communities instead of sending down ultimatums. You work for us! Finally, you all preach about being "green", when you do not support or advocate to preserve our priceless open space.
