To Whom it May Concern,

It has been beyond disappointing to see how all of the responsible agencies are pretending that it's ok for how the numbers for needed new housing were established.

It's been shown (by Embarcadero Institute et al) that there are tremendous errors in the calculus.

The numbers invented by McKinsey are fantasy numbers.

California's population isn't growing like it once was.

There's a pandemic that's altering so much about housing needs.

And while not everyone wants one, single family homes are still part of the American dream for a vast number of our citizens.

The only thing that these outrageous, unattainable new RHNA numbers will accomplish is handing a major payday to developers, who don't give a damn about our communities .

Thank you.
