Determination of amount of housing required in Cities

Message:

I am a resident of Rancho Santa Margarita, CA. and you have allocated (658) housing units to be built in a High fire Hazard Severity Zone as designated by CalFire. How do you propose a City do that with good conscious knowing that the only vacant land is in a high fire area and that two major fires within the last few months and within 10 miles of the City burned 20,590 Acres, lost several structures, and evacuated 115,000 residents? You probably do not know this, but there are only two exits out of this City and both by bridges. If in a catastrophe (earthquake or otherwise), those bridges should collapse, do you want the added traffic you are proposing to cause a greater loss of life? I implore you to please re-consider your numbers.
