Overview
A program of the Southern California Association of Governments (SCAG), Go Human, is a community outreach and advertising campaign with the goals of reducing traffic collisions in Southern California and encouraging people to walk and bike more. Go Human is a collaboration between SCAG and the health departments and transportation commissions from six counties in the region – Imperial, Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, San Bernardino and Ventura.

California has the nation’s highest number of fatalities involving people walking and bicycling, and traffic collisions are one of the top causes of injury and death in the Southern California region. Go Human raises public awareness of the rules of the road through English and Spanish advertising on digital platforms, radio stations, billboards, bus stops and social media. Go Human utilizes a series of ads where figures in everyday road signs are replaced with images of real people walking and bicycling. By conveying that these aren’t just signs, Go Human reminds us that our actions and decisions, when driving, walking and bicycling, impact real people.

More than half of the 191 cities in the Southern California region have been aggressively pursuing funding opportunities to create safer and more accessible streets for walking and biking. By encouraging Southern California residents to walk and bike more, SCAG’s Go Human campaign plays a key role in this transformation. In the SCAG region, approximately 37.5 percent of all trips are less than three miles, a distance that can easily be covered walking or bicycling. Go Human encourages residents to consider walking or bicycling for short trips and reminds drivers to slow down and look for them.

Financial support for the advertising campaign is being provided by a grant from the Office of Traffic Safety, through the National Highway Safety Administration.
Slow down. She’s going places.
Slow down. They’re going places.
It’s not just a sign. Watch for people walking.
It’s not just a sign. Look for them before you turn.
It’s not just a sign. Look for her before you turn.
Slow down and stop. Every intersection is a crosswalk.
Be on the safe side. Cross at the corner or crosswalk.
Go with the flow. Ride in the direction of traffic.
It’s not just a sign. Give people room to ride.
Give even more room. Switch lanes to pass safely.

Newsletter Update

The Southern California Association of Governments (SCAG) recently launched the third year of its Go Human advertising campaign to promote traffic safety and encourage people to walk and bike during their daily routines. Planned in coordination with County Transportation Commissions and Health Departments across the region, Go Human targets areas with high rates of collisions and reminds drivers to slow down and watch for people walking and biking.

In Southern California, 1,580 people died and more than 149,000 people were injured in collisions, according to the California Statewide Integrated Traffic Records System. The number of deaths and injuries are alarming, but many are preventable. Go Human aims to help combat and reverse these statistics through targeted advertising and outreach.

Go Human also partners with the cities to co-host open-streets events and temporary demonstration projects that promote safer and more accessible streets. The events are part of a broader effort to generate support for local infrastructure planning projects, showing how these changes make walking and biking safer and more convenient. Dates and locations for upcoming demonstration events can be found on the Go Human Events page.
